SIR DINAR.

A puff of northeast wind shot over the hill, detaching the last December leaf from the sycamore on its summit, and swooped like a wave upon the roofs and chimney stacks below. The smoke ascending through the chimneys was caught midway and driven back with showers of soot and wood ash, discomfiting the townsman who lingered by their hearths to read the morning paper. The blast, its strength thus broken, fell flat upon the macadam of the main street, scattering its fine dust into fan shaped figures, then died away westward in eddies. Among these eddies the sycamore leaf danced and twirled, now shooting along the ground upon its edge, like a tin disk, now whisking up to the level of the first story windows. A nurse, holding up a 3-year-old child behind the pane, called out, pointing after the leaf:

"Look—there goes Sir Dinar!"

Now the legend of Sir Dinar is as old as the fabled tales, though later touches, easily detected, have been added to it. And this is how they tell it: Sir Dinar was the first son and comeliest of King Geraint, who had left Arthur's court for his own castle of Portcatholn-Roseland and was buried, when his time came, over the Nare, in his golden boat, with his silver corser beside him. To fill his seat at the round table he sent, in the last of the sixteenth year, this Dinar, who, in two years, was made knight by King Arthur, and in the third was turned an old man before he had achieved a single deed of note, as is to be shown.

For on the fifth day after he was dubbed knight, upon the feast of Pentecost, there began the great quest of the Sangraal, which took Sir Lancelot from the court, Sir Percival, Sir Bors, Sir Galahad, Sir Galahad and the flower of Arthur's knights. And because, after their going, it was all red cheer at Camelot, and heavy, empty days, Sir Dinar took two of his best friends aside, both young knights, Sir Galahad and Sir Orzanne le Cour Harol, and spoke to them of riding from the court by stealth, "for," he said, "we have many days before us, and no villainy upon our conscience, and besides are eager. Who knows, then, but we may achieve this adventure of the Sangraal?" So they listened and imparted it to ane, Sir Sentral, and the four rode forth, privily one morning before the dawn and set their faces northward.

Now, the day of their setting out was that next after Christmas and is the feast of Stephen the Martyr, and as they rode through a thick wood it came into Sir Dinar's mind that upon this day it was right to kill any bird that flew in remembrance that when St. Stephen was slain all but escaped from the soldiers who guarded him, a small bird had sung in their ears and awakened them. By this the sky was growing white with the morning, but nothing yet clear to the sight, and while they pressed forward under the naked boughs, their horses' hoofs crackling the frozen undergrowth beneath their feet, Sir Dinar was aware of a bird's wing rustling ahead and lay a bolt without warning his companions why he did this, who had forgotten what morning it was and drew rein in their astonishment.

But pressing forward in a minute they came upon a gerfaelon lying, with long limbs hanging about his feet and through his breast, the hole that Sir Dinar's bolt had made. While they stooped over this bird the sun got up, and lifting their heads they saw a green glade before them, and in the midst of the glade three pavilions set, each of red sandal, that shone at the first touch of the morning. In the first pavilion slept seven knights, and in the second a score of damsels, but by the door of the third stood a lady, fair and tall, in a robe of samite, who, as they drew near to accost her, inquired of them:

"Which of you four has slain my gerfaelon?"

And when Sir Dinar confessed and began to make his excuse, "Silly knight," said she, "who couldst not guess that my falcon, too, was abroad to avenged the blessed Stephen! Or dost think that it was a hawk, of all birds, that sang a sweet melody in the ears of his guards?"

With that she laughed, as if pacified, and asked of their affairs, and being told that they rode in search of the Sangraal she laughed again, saying: "Silly knights all! that seek it before you are bearded! For three of you must faint and die on the quest, and you, sir," turning to Sir Dinar, "must many times long to die, yet never reach nearer by a foot."

"Let it be as God will," answered Sir Dinar. "But hast thou any tidings to guide us?"

"I have heard," said she, "that it was seen latest in the land of Gore, beyond Trent water." And with her white finger she pointed down a narrow glade that led to the northwest. So they, thanked her and picked on, none guessing that she herself was King Urienes's wife of Gore, and none other than Queen

Morgan le Fay, the famous enchantress, who for loss of her gerfaelon was lightly sending Sir Dinar to his ruin.

So all that day they rode, two and two, in the strait alley that she had pointed out, and by her enchantments she made the winter trees to move with them, serried close on either hand, so that, though the four knights were nothing of it, they advanced not a furlong for all their haste. But toward nightfall there appeared close ahead a blaze of windows lit and then a tall castle with dim towers soaring up and shaking to the din of minstrelsy. And finding a great company about the doors they lit down from their horses and stepped into the great hall, Sir Dinar leading them. For while their eyes were dazzled, seeing that sconces flared in every window, and the place was full of knights and damsels brightly clad, and the floor shone. But while they were yet blinking a band of maidens came and unbuckled their arms and cast a shining upon each, which was hardly done when a lady came forward, them out of the throng, and though she was truly the Queen Morgan le Fay they knew her not at all, for by her necromancy she had altered her countenance.

"Come, dance," said she, "for in an instant the musicians will begin."

Now the other three knights tarried awhile, being weary, but Sir Dinar stepped forward and caught the hand of the damsel, and she, as she gave it, laughed in his eyes. She was dressed all in scarlet, with scarlet shoes, and the hair lay on her shoulders like burnished gold. As Sir Dinar set his arm around her and with a crash the merry band began, and floating out with him into the dance, her red shoes twinkling, she tossed her hair about her head, and under his nostrils, he leaned back a little in his arms and laughed again.

It happened that Sir Galahad, leaning by the doorway, heard the laugh and saw her feet twinkle like blood red moths, and he called to Sir Dinar. But Sir Dinar heard nothing, nor did any of the dancers turn their heads, though he called again and loudly. Then Sir Sentral and Sir Orzanne also began to call, fearing they knew not what for their comrade. But the guests still drifted by as they were ghosts, and Sir Dinar, with the red blood showing beneath the dawn on his cheeks, smiled and whirled with the woman upon his arm.

By and by his breath came shortly, and he could have rested, but she denied him.

"For a moment," he said, "because I have ridden far today."

But she hung the more heavily upon his arm, and still the music went on. And now, gazing upon her, he was frightened, for it seemed she was growing older under his eyes, with deep lines sinking into her face, and the flesh of her neck and bosom shriveling up so that the skin hung loose and gathered in wrinkles. And now he heard the voices of his companions calling about the door and would have cast off the sorceress and run to them. But when he tried, his arm was welded around her waist, nor could he so lightly free his feet.

The three knights now, seeing sweat upon his face, and the looks he cast toward them, would have broken in and freed him, but they, too, were by enchantment held there in the doorway. So, with their eyes starting, they must needs stay there and watch it all, and while they stood the boards became a third time, bringing his eyes close to his. And the poison of death was in her lips as she kissed him upon the mouth. With that kiss there was a crash, the lights went out, and the music died away in a wail, and the three knights by the door were caught away suddenly and stunned by a great wind.

Aching, they found themselves lying in the glade where they had come upon the three red pavilions. Their horses were cropping at the turf beside them, and Sir Dinar's horse stood in sight a little way off. But Sir Dinar himself was deep in the forest, twirling and spinning among the rotten leaves, and on his arm hung a corrupting corpse. For a whole day they sought him and found him not (for he heard nothing of their shouts), and toward evening mounted and rode forward after the Sangraal, on which quest they died, all three, each in his turn.

But Sir Dinar remained and twirled and skipped till the body he held was a skeleton, and still he twirled till it dropped away piecemeal, and yet again till it was but a stain of dust on his ragged sleeve. But before this his hair was white and his face wizened with age.

But on a day a knight in white armor came riding through the forest, leaning somewhat heavily on his saddle bow as he rode, and was aware of an old decrepit man that lay toward him, jiggling and cowering as if for gladness, yet caught him by the stirrup and looked up with rheumy tears in his eyes.

"In God's name, who art thou?" asked the knight. He, too, was past his youth, but his face shone with a marvelous, strange glory.

"I am young Sir Dinar, that was made a knight of the round table but five days before Pentecost, and I know thee. Thou art Sir Galahad, who shouldst win the Sangraal. Therefore by Christ's power rid me of this enchantment."

"I have not won it yet," Sir Galahad answered, sighing. "Yet, poor comrade, I may do something for thee, though I cannot stir thy dancing."

So he stretched out his hand and touched Sir Dinar, and by his touch Sir Dinar became a withered leaf of the wood. And when mothers saw him dancing before the wind they told this story of him to their children.—A. T. Quiller-Couch.

THE EXILES OF ENGLAND.

Their Tombs and Memorials Scattered all Over Europe.

No doubt we have driven out our own exiles as well as received the exiles of foreign states, although not in the same proportion and measure. There are tombs of Stuart in Italy, and there is a church in Rome where have rested for centuries the remains of the greatest Irish rebel who ever stood up against the English crown. But the ashes of any Stuart would be welcome to a resting place here if it were so desired, and if the plot of earth which holds the body of the gallant Tyrone were to be located with the soil of any English cemetery no Englishman would make objection, and indeed we fear that very few Englishmen would know who the Earl of Tyrone was. There is some satisfaction in thinking that an Englishman traveling in foreign countries finds little of mute reproach in the graves names of exiles on tombstones. The exile's home in triumph of some banished man's coffin is often the crown of a political party's endeavor. Sometimes, too, the refusal to allow of the bringing home makes a man and a party popular. We can most of us remember well how the fate of the late President Carnot became in a moment a popular idol out of comparative obscurity because he was refused to allow the remains of his own father to be brought back to France from a grave in Magdeburg.

It was in the zenith of the second empire, and Napoleon III thought he could do a popular thing, and indeed perhaps sincerely felt the desire to be generous, when he offered to the Carnot family a resting place in triumph, to France the coffin of the organizer of victory. Carnot, the son, sternly refused to accept the invitation. His father, he said, had given his genius and his life to the service of the French republic. His body should never rest in a land which was governed by imperial despotism. Perhaps the late President Carnot might never have been the chief magistrate of a French republic if his father had not thus pre-emptorily and publicly rejected the offer of Napoleon III. Time came round, and the empire is gone, and the Carnot tradition has its revenge. Napoleon III, to do him justice, was not ungenerous in his denials with political opponents, at all events with political opponents whom he thought no longer able to work him harm. It is not easy, however, to make safe calculation in that way. The man in the coffin is sometimes able to work more harm to the ruling system than the orator in the political tribune.—London Telegraph.

DANGEROUS RULES OF ETIQUETTE.

Treating in New Mexico Is Fraught With Many Difficulties.

The man from New Mexico and his friend stood against the bar in one of the palatial saloons of Chicago. The dispenser put out four glasses.

"Where's your beeswax?" asked the New Mexico visitor.

"I'm not on," responded the dispenser.

"Never tend bar in New Mexico?"

The dispenser said he had never had the pleasure.

"Pleasure nothing. 'Tain't no pleasure, I'm tellin' you. It's much as a man's life is worth. But I see you don't say about the beeswax. Well, I'll tell you how they drink in New Mexico. There's only one thing to drink, that's whiskey—liquor, see? The bartender sets up one glass. He ain't got no whole lot of glasses like you. He just sets up one big glass. Then he takes out his beeswax, and he marks the glass for as many drinks as there are drinkers in the party. Say there's three. He puts two beeswax marks on the glass about so far apart. Then he fills the glass with liquor to the rim of the glass. The first man in the party drinks down to the first beeswax mark, and then he passes the glass to the next man, and he drinks down to the second beeswax mark, and the third man drinks to the bottom of the glass. It ain't safe for a man to go below his beeswax mark. A man in New Mexico wouldn't do that wouldn't live long enough to send his wife a dyin' request. A New Mexico man might as well as get drunk, but he wouldn't drink below his beeswax mark. Got any water?"

"Oh, yes. Plenty of water."

"Well, set 'er up. And if there's anything extra for it I'll pay the cost. Say, this is the all freest town I was ever in. The idea of settin' up four glasses for two men to drink outen. I reckon there ain't another town on earth where such extravagance is seen."—Chicago Herald.

Simple Explanation of Grip.

Medical writers make it clear why grip is so fatal. They tell of hemorrhages and pyemic results, with purulent and gangrenous inflammation of the lung tissues and frequent metastasis to other organs. One case of hemorrhages and hematomas in the muscular tissue, parenchymatous bleedings and bleedings by diapedesis, pneumonitis, hemorrhagic interitis, is mentioned. In many cases there is hyperemia of the pia also meningitis and hemorrhage into the lateral ventricle and very frequently lobular pneumonia.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

What He Was.

When first we were at Abington, writes W. R. E. Rann in his reminiscences of Irish life, a peasant girl came two or three times to the rectory with a hare and other game for sale. My father, wishing to ascertain whether she came by them honestly, asked her where she got them. "Sure, your riverine," said she, "my father is poacher to Lord Clare."

The following Thanksgiving proclamation has been issued by Governor Markham:

"In accordance with the established custom I proclaim Thursday, the 29th day of November, as Thanksgiving Day, and in keeping with the spirit that gave it birth, the memories it reveres and cherishes, let this day mark the altruism of our well-loved State. Let us dedicate the day to hospitality and charity. Let family reunions be characterized by peace and good will. Forget not the wanderer and the stranger, but let them feel the influence of generous deeds and become welcome participants in our happiness and prosperity."

The best plaster.—Dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on over the seat of pain. It is better than any plaster. When the lungs are sore such an application on the chest and another on the back, between the shoulder blades, will often prevent pneumonia. There is nothing so good for a lame back or a pain in the side. A sore throat can nearly always be cured in one night by applying a small bandage dampened with pain balm. 50 cent bottles for sale by all dealers.

Wrinkles may be very often removed by simple means. They are nothing more nor less than contracted or depressed muscles. Naturally anything which induces a healthy growth in the depressed muscles will cause them to expand and fill up the cavity of the wrinkles and stretch the skin where it was before relaxed. The best thing to do is to rub the wrinkled part with a little glycerine or fine olive oil, taken on the ends of the fingers, for five or ten minutes.

FACT AND FANCY.

BY JEDWIN NEBWAME.

The public library movement, throughout the United States has become so pronounced that many periodicals of widely different scope have noticed it in articles of greater or less extent. Many of the States have statutes which enable towns to tax themselves for the establishment and maintenance of libraries. California is one of these. Several of her towns and cities have already availed themselves of this privilege and doubt less more will do so in the future.

The State has several good libraries. San Francisco has three, one of which is supported by the city. Oakland has an excellent general public library, and I am told that Los Angeles has a very fine one. Nearly all of the towns of the State have a library of some sort, but not all of them are public, supported by the people as a whole. Most of these have some kind of a fee for the use of the books. This is found by experience to be bad, as it prevents those who need it most from using the library.

The library of the State University is perhaps the best in California. Any one may visit it to study or read. It would seem that the citizens of Berkeley were well provided, but they are not content as they are. The public library is recognized as being essential to the perfect development of a community and so Berkeley is to have one.

We as a people believe in public schools for the youth of the land and have decreed that they shall be maintained. No one doubts their usefulness. One object of educating the man or woman is that he or she may read intelligently. Now the majority of people cannot, or believe they cannot, buy books, so they don't read, but for a mere pittance they can have the cream of literature constantly before them.

The fact that a man pays taxes for the support of such an institution is guaranty that he will take an interest in it, and when a man takes an interest in a library he is doing good. There is embodied in the idea of the public library the true form of philanthropy—helping others to develop themselves—and every owner of property is a philanthropist, the poor as well as the rich.

In a town of Sonoma's population it is impossible to have operas, the drama, lectures, museums, art galleries, zoological gardens and all the accessories which make for culture, but it is possible to have a library that will nobly supplement them and in a great measure take their place. Anybody that has the opportunity of reading good books—I do not mean goody-goody books, but strong, healthy, vital books—has himself to blame if he is uneducated, it matters not where he lives. If he have neither books nor contact with the outer world he degenerates mentally. In the country the book must perform the place of lectures, art galleries, etc., so the necessity for them is great.

Everybody complains, and justly too, of hard times. Some perhaps are unable to give anything but moral support. If this is the case with you give it with all your might. Those who can give money should give it liberally. This is not a case of sending missionaries to the Cannibal Islands, but it is a charity beginning at home. Sonoma needs a public library and she is going to have one.

I have been told on good authority that there are ten men in and near Sonoma who will give ten dollars a piece. There ought to be and I believe that there are twenty men who will give five dollars and forty men who will give two and one-half dollars. This would make three hundred dollars—three hundred dollars invested for the pleasure and profit of the people of Sonoma and vicinity.

Look out for an announcement in the very near future of an entertainment to start a library fund.

When Cupid smiles, his bow is bent, Unerring flies his shaft; Straight to the quivering heart is sent The nectar of true love.

Still another great one has had the thin-spun web cut by the abhorred shears. Rubinstein has been carried on the wings of Fame to the judgment seat of God.

Sweet Music, muse of all our moods, What dirge can speak thy grief? For sleep has touched his eyes, and Fame Has placed the laurel leaf.

Oh! sound some grandly joyous strain, Let every organ blow; Waft high the notes that kept him here On earth, or far below.

The swell of Heaven's grandest Dirge, Which tuned his listening ear, Swell! swell! ye sounding trumpets, Let all the hosts of Heaven hear.

Mr. W. M. Terry, who has been in the drug business at Elkton, Ky., for the past twelve years, says: "Chamberlain's Cough Remedy gives better satisfaction than any other cough medicine I have ever sold." There is good reason for this. No other will cure cold so quickly; no other is so certain a preventive and cure for croup; no other affords so much relief in cases of whooping cough. For sale by all dealers.

Women should realize more fully than they do what a difference it makes in their apparent years whether they wear their hair high on their heads or low in the neck. A coil at the nape of the neck will take years away from the age, while one on the crown of the head will add a decade to the freshest school-girl.

NEW WINE ASSOCIATION.

Its Object is to Handle the Entire Vintage of the State.

Another meeting of wine-growers was held in San Francisco one day this week for the purpose of perfecting the trust that is to handle all the wine product of the State. There were seventy-one growers present, representing about 7,000,000 gallons of wine. The subscriptions at the close of the day amounted to 6,600,000 gallons.

A discussion was held in connection with the election of permanent directors and the representation of the different sections. It was decided that the four counties raising the largest quantity of wine, Sonoma, Santa Clara, Napa and Alameda counties, should each have one representative, and that the other five representatives should be chosen at large, the nine to constitute the permanent Board of Directors, in which the sweet wine interests would be largely represented.

Among the well-known wine-growers of this valley who have joined the trust, which numbers nearly one hundred wine-growers in different parts of the State, we may mention J. Chauvet, Martin Peter, I. De Turk and A. H. McCartney.

IS IT A PUT UP JOB?

An Attempt to be Made to Oust Auditor-elect Atchinson.

A report reached this place from Petaluma, last Tuesday, that Geo. Ross of Santa Rosa intended to enjoin the County Clerk from issuing a certificate of election to A. J. Atchinson, Auditor and Recorder-elect, on the grounds that he had violated the Purity of Election Act in promising Ross a deputyship.

George Ross says that Atchinson indirectly promised him the position of first deputy; that the understanding between them was plain; that he gave up his work and spent his time and money for Atchinson on the implied promise that he was to be taken care of. Ross now says that Atchinson has "gone back on him" since election and that he has no prospect of ever getting a deputyship. He says he has sufficient evidence of Atchinson's violation of the Purity of Election Law in promising him the position to oust him from his office, and that steps will be taken at once to prevent him from serving.

A formidable array of lawyers has been retained on both sides and an interesting contest is anticipated. Mr. Atchinson, who is one of Petaluma's most respected citizens, says he never promised a deputyship to anyone, and that there is nothing on which to base an action against him to prevent him from taking the office to which he was elected by a plurality of 723 votes.

PROBABLY FATAL ACCIDENT.

Wm. Bihler Thrown from His Wagon.

On Tuesday night last Wm. Bihler of Lakeville, while returning to his home from Petaluma in a two-horse wagon, met with an accident that may prove fatal. When he had nearly reached home the horses took fright and ran away. Mr. Bihler was thrown from his seat and dashed with great force into the road, where he was found in an unconscious condition a short time after the accident happened. He was picked up and carried to his home and a physician summoned from Petaluma. An examination of the injured man showed that his right arm and three ribs were broken. His head was also badly cut and bruised. At latest accounts Mr. Bihler's condition was considered very precarious.

The World's Tribute to
Dr. Price's Cream
Baking Powder
Highest Honors Awarded
by the World's Columbian
Exposition,
Chicago, 1893

World's Fair
HIGHEST MEDAL awarded to
Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder

The highest award was given on every claim, comprising superiority in leavening power, keeping properties, purity and excellence. This verdict has been given by the best jury ever assembled for such a purpose, backed by the recommendation of the Chief Chemist of the United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., who made an elaborate examination and test of all the baking powders. This is pre-eminently the highest authority on such matters in America.

This verdict conclusively settles the question and proves that Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is superior in every way to any other brand.

NOTE.—The Chief Chemist rejected the Alum baking powders, stating to the World's Fair jury that he considered them unwholesome.

San Francisco Board of Health. Royal, the Superior Baking Powder.

THE BUSINESS GIRL.

The Expresses Her Opinion of Men, Matrimony and Money.

The social philosopher had been petting her chin in an absurdly hysedish manner, and as the thoughtful panorama was ominously regarded as a forerunner of a more or less prolonged lecture she didn't dare disappoint her admiring petticoated audience. So she said:

"It seems to me that the very moment that a young woman shows ability in any chosen profession about 500 ordinarily charming and lovely individuals rise up like solicitous hens over a weak legged chicken and implore her not to spoil her good work by tumbling into the matrimonial tank."

"Huh!" puffed the girl who always interrupts. "The motherly hens had better wait until she gets a good chance. Then they'll see how quickly 'Yes, sir, I'm yours,' could be said."

"What nonsense!" the social philosopher deigned to answer. "Every girl has opportunities to marry, but no girl in her right mind is going to blunder herself to the dozens of things to be considered. There always comes first, for if you are a business woman, earning a fairly decent salary, it is absurd to marry a man who receives but little more. Diamond tastes and window glass purses make a mighty unsatisfactory combination, my dear. Besides perhaps you are fond of your work and dislike household managing, but if you go down to business every day people will look wise and say mean things, and you'll wish yourself unhooked from your matrimonial venture."

"Perfect men are so hard to find too! Now, what girl could endure a bald head or a red nose, even if it went with loads of wealth and bushels of love? Why, in less than six weeks she'd be making the poor man wear a filled cap and a prepared chalk nose. A man's good looks go a long way with a girl, I'm ashamed to confess, and a jerky manner of talking, or a sissy walk, or a nervous movement of the hands will make a girl's teeth grind and her temper fray at the edges—that is, unless she's really and truly in love. Then he might be a tailor's dummy, noseless and cross eyed, bewiskered and with rouged cheeks, and she'll still think him the loveliest thing on earth."—Chicago Record.

Mimicry of the Spider.

A southern man gives the following account of his discovery of a chameleon spider: "One afternoon, while tramping along a dusty road, I noticed in the bushes which grew along the side what appeared to be a singular looking white flower, with a blue center. Stopping to examine it, I found to my astonishment that it was not a flower at all, but a spider's web, and that the supposed light blue heart of the flower was the spider itself, lying in wait for its prey. The mottled brown legs of the spider were extended in such a way as to resemble the divisions between the petals of a flower."

"The web itself, very delicately woven into a rosette pattern, was white, and the threads that suspended it from the bushes were so fine as to be almost invisible. The whole thing had the appearance of being suspended in the air upon a stem concealed beneath. Upon knocking the spider from his perch into the white gauze net which I carried my surprise was greatly increased upon seeing my captive instantly turn in color from blue to white. I shook the net, and again the spider changed color, this time its body becoming a dull greenish brown. As often as I would shake the net just so often would the spider change its color, and I kept it up until it had assumed about every hue of the rainbow."—Philadelphia Ledger.

How to Read.

We cannot too strongly impress every daughter with the fact that habits of reading are wonderfully powerful. Early learn to read only good books, and read them critically and thoughtfully. The purpose for which we read a book must not be mere pleasure. We must aim to obtain and retain the author's thought and meaning. Few good books do not have some particular question upon which they dwell strongly. A few well directed questions from father, mother or brother will help to bring this to light, and in addition will enforce the fact that an opinion of one's own is of more value than a dozen that were begged, borrowed or stolen from some eminent man or woman. Many people regret that they were not early taught to consider the author's name a portion of the title of his book and are continually remarking, "Oh, I can't remember who wrote that book."—Milwaukee Wisconsin.

She Rides a Wheel. Queen Marguerite of Italy has yielded to the prevailing cyclomania. She rides two hours every day in the garden of the Quirinal and professes to be greatly enamored of the sport. Since the queen began to ride the wheel she has improved wonderfully in health, having acquired a hearty appetite that she never had before and being enabled to perform her pressing social duties with comparative ease.

A Curious Coincidence. Not so long since a stowaway was found dead under the main hatch of one of the National line of steamers. He had concealed himself before the steamer left Liverpool and died of suffocation. Curiously enough, in his pocket was found a novel entitled "Doomed on the Deep."—Chicago Times.
